This huge town house, to be reformed, consists of two floors and multiple units, a large terrace and patio where a garden and pool area could be created.

The ground floor of the property almost completely maintains the old Renaissance-style flooring, wooden beams on the ceilings and built-in wardrobes.

The upper floor began to be reformed but for personal reasons it could not be carried out.

Both on the ground floor and upstairs there is a bathroom and one of the rooms on the upper floor has pre-installation for an en-suite bathroom.

The upper floor could be directly accessed by creating a new access from the street and creating two completely independent houses.
